SONG OF STEAM

A CHRONICLE OF PADDLE STEAMERS AND SCREW STEAMERS IN TASMANIAN WATERS—1832-1939

by

D. G. O'MAY

THIS narrative is not intended to be a complete account, but merely a record of some of the steamships and in particular the pioneer steamers trading to and from the shores of this fair isle.

During the first thirty years after the colony was founded, the trade was carried on entirely by sailing ships, but from 1832 steamships began to make inroads into the coastal and inter-colonial trade, and were followed a few years later by vessels from overseas.

Price: $9·95 plus $5 postage and handling.

FERRIES OF THE DERWENT

A HISTORY OF THE FERRY SERVICES ON THE DERWENT RIVER

by

D. G. O'MAY

THE name of O'May has been synonymous with the maritime history of the Hobart Harbour and the Derwent River for many decades.

The regularity and efficiency of operation by the family fleet of ferries was greatly appreciated by residents and general users of the highly regarded harbour services.

David O'May was most versatile in his activities as a mariner, yachtsman, boatbuilder, model builder, historian, author and administrator.

This, his last writings, published sadly posthumously, is a highly interesting recording of the long history of Hobart, the Derwent, its harbour and historic communications.

Price: $16·95 plus $5 postage and handling.

SELECTION GUIDELINES: ADVICE TO APPLICANTS

THE Tasmanian State Service is a career service, and provides permanent employees with opportunities for career advancement. Advancement is achieved by obtaining promotion to positions of a higher classification.

Applicants from within the State Service should ensure that they direct their claims to the position for which they have applied. The Application Form (Form 201) is a guide to the essential information required about each applicant. In particular, considerable thought and care needs to be given to relating the application to the Selection Criteria/Position Description of the vacant position.

All positions in the State Service are also open to applicants from outside the State Service and positions are filled solely on the basis of merit.

Selection Criteria

The Selection Criteria are derived from the Position Description and are used as the basis for assessing applicants. Usually, each applicant will be ranked on each criterion, and whoever rates the highest in order of merit will be recommended for appointment.

The application should emphasise information about the applicant which is relevant to the selection criteria. Information not relevant is very much less important.

Selection criteria may be obtained from the Contact Officer listed in the position advertisement. As a rule, selection criteria form part of the position description.

Selection Committee

The Selection Committee has the job of determining which applicant has the greatest merit. The process involves:

- establishing selection criteria
- examining applications
- deciding which applicants are to be interviewed
- advising internal applicants who are not to be interviewed
- interviewing applicants
- obtaining referee reports
- making the selection
- preparing the Selection Committee report
- providing post-selection counselling for unsuccessful internal applicants who ask to be counselled.

Interviews

Not all in-Service applicants will necessarily be interviewed. If the Committee believes that a particular application does not warrant an interview, then the applicant may be advised and given the opportunity to supply additional information if the original application was deficient in some way.

The interview will be directed towards the selection criteria. Questions will be asked of the applicants in order to elicit further information relative and relevant to the criteria. Applicants should use the opportunity of the interview to re-inforce the relevance of their claims to the position by relating their comments to the criteria.

Referees

Referees reports may be sought by the Committee before or after the interview stage. Applicants should make sure that referees are aware that they have been nominated to provide a report. Naturally, referees should be able to comment on the employee in some detail. The Committee may also decide to contact other persons if it believes that such persons can usefully comment on the applicant's claims.

Post-selection Counselling

Obviously, not all applicants will be successful in their applications. Generally, wherever practical members of the Selection Committee will be available to provide post-selection counselling to any internal applicant who wishes to be counselled. Counselling provides the employee with an opportunity to discuss the reasons for non-selection, as well as courses of action for strengthening the employee's claims to future vacancies. Where selection is based on a performance appraisal system which incorporates counselling, it may not be appropriate for counselling also to be offered at the post-selection stage.

MANY of the following positions may be filled directly through the Commonwealth Employment Service. Persons interested in gaining employment with Tasmanian Government Agencies in these and other base-grade positions should register with their local C.E.S. office.

All inquiries about temporary employment should be directed in the first instance to the local office of the C.E.S.
